

To the Doeihu Editors,

I wanted to share an interesting story we had in our office:

We are five women who work in the office on a regular basis, with two men who are liable to come into the office at any time. One of the men was travelling to Israel for a week, and as it happens, only one or two of the women were planning to be in the office during that week.

This was a problem because it would be leaving one or two women alone with one man. In addition, the door to the main office locks automatically, and it's not really an option to keep it propped open.

This situation has happened already in the past, but I hadn't been receiving the Doeihu emails at that time. This time, it is only because of the Doeihu emails that I was aware to ask a shaila, and of course the answer was that the ladies CANNOT come into the office during the time that the second man is in Israel.

Thank you for preventing us from transgressing a serious aveira! Tizku l'mitzvos!
